

No. _____

IN THE
Supreme Court of the United States

TORREY LYNNE HENDERSON, AMARA JANA
RIDGE and JUSTIN ROYCE THOMPSON,

Petitioners,

—v.—

THE STATE OF TEXAS,

Respondent.

ON PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE SEVENTH
COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE STATE OF TEXAS

PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI

Emerson Sykes
Brian Hauss
Vera Eidelman
AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES
UNION FOUNDATION, INC.
125 Broad Street, 18th Floor
New York, NY 10004

David D. Cole
AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES
UNION FOUNDATION, INC.
915 15th Street NW
Washington, D.C. 20005

Sorsha Huff
DEANDRA GRANT LAW
1333 West McDermott Drive,
Suite 180
Allen, TX 75013

Savannah Kumar
Counsel of Record
Brian Klosterboer
Edgar Saldivar
Adriana Piñon
Thomas Buser-Clancy
ACLU FOUNDATION OF
TEXAS, INC.
1018 Preston Street, 4th Floor
Houston, TX 77002
(956) 374-4310
skumar@aclutx.org

Counsel for Petitioners

QUESTION PRESENTED

Petitioners assembled with others in a brief, peaceful march along a historic Texas street. The march took place primarily on the sidewalk, but when necessary to change direction or in response to water narrowing their path, the marchers at times stepped onto the street. During the brief march, an unidentified cyclist, who was not shown to have any connection to Petitioners, slowed traffic for 20-90 seconds. There is no evidence that Petitioners themselves obstructed traffic or directed or intended that anyone else do so. Petitioners were nonetheless convicted under a state statute that bars obstructing a passageway, and the court below affirmed their convictions based on the actions of unnamed others and “the crowd.”

The question presented is:

Do the First and Fourteenth Amendments prohibit the government from convicting individuals for obstructing a passageway based solely on their participation in a peaceful march on public sidewalks and streets, without evidence that the defendants themselves knowingly or intentionally obstructed any passageway or directed, authorized, ratified, or intended that others do so?

PARTIES TO THE PROCEEDING

Petitioners are Torrey Henderson, Amara Ridge, and Justin Thompson. The State of Texas is the respondent.

RELATED PROCEEDINGS

Texas Court of Criminal Appeals

Torrey Lynne Henderson v. The State of Texas, PD-0844-23 (petition for discretionary review refused March 27, 2024)

Amara Jana Ridge v. The State of Texas, PD-0845-23 (petition for discretionary review refused March 27, 2024)

Justin Royce Thompson v. The State of Texas, PD-0846-23 (petition for discretionary review refused March 27, 2024)

Texas Seventh Court of Appeals

Torrey Lynne Henderson v. The State of Texas, 07-22-00303-CR (judgment upholding conviction entered on November 15, 2023)

Amara Jana Ridge v. The State of Texas, 07-22-00304-CR (judgment upholding conviction entered November 15, 2023)

Justin Royce Thompson v. The State of Texas, 07-22-00305-CR (judgment upholding conviction entered November 15, 2023)

County Court of Law of Cooke County, Texas

The State of Texas v. Torrey Lynne Henderson, CR20-65983 (judgment and sentence entered September 1, 2022)

The State of Texas v. Amara Jana Ridge, CR20-65984 (judgment and sentence entered on September 1, 2022)

The State of Texas v. Justin Royce Thompson, CR20-65985 (judgment and sentence entered on September 1, 2022)

TABLE OF CONTENTS

QUESTION PRESENTED	i
PARTIES TO THE PROCEEDING	ii
RELATED PROCEEDINGS.....	ii
TABLE OF AUTHORITIES	vi
PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI	1
OPINIONS BELOW	1
JURISDICTION.....	1
CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS INVOLVED	1
INTRODUCTION	2
STATEMENT.....	5
A. Factual background.....	5
Texas’s Obstruction Statute	5
Petitioners’ Convictions Under the Obstruction of Passageway Statute	6
B. Procedural History and Preservation	9
REASONS FOR GRANTING THE PETITION.....	12
I. The Decision Below Conflicts with this Court’s Precedents Protecting the Right to Protest in Traditional Public Forums	12
A. The Court of Appeals’ Opinion Conflicts with this Court’s Precedent Allowing Expressive Activity on Public Streets	13

B. The Decision Below Conflicts with this Court’s Free Speech Precedents by Holding Petitioners Liable for the Acts of Others During the Course of a Protected Protest	17
II. The Decision Below Conflicts with Federal Courts of Appeals.....	21
III. The Question Presented is of Fundamental Importance	23
IV. This Case Is an Appropriate Vehicle to Defend an Important Federal Right and Resolve the Question Presented	25
CONCLUSION.....	26
APPENDIX
Appendix A, Texas Seventh Court of Appeals Opinion (November 15, 2023)	1a
Appendix B, Texas Court of Criminal Appeals Refusal of Henderson's Petition for Discretionary Review (March 27, 2024)	30a
Appendix C, Texas Court of Criminal Appeals Refusal of Ridge's Petition for Discretionary Review (March 27, 2024)	31a
Appendix D, Texas Court of Criminal Appeals Refusal of Thompson's Petition for Discretionary Review (March 27, 2024)	32a
Appendix E, Texas Seventh Court of Appeals Order Staying Issuance of Mandates (May 7, 2024)	33a

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

	Page
CASES
Amalgamated Food Employees Union Local 590 v. Logan Valley Plaza Inc., 391 U.S. 308 (1968)	14, 15
Barham v. Ramsey, 434 F.3d 565 (D.C. Cir. 2006)	23
Brandenburg v. Ohio, 395 U.S. 444 (1969)	18
Cantwell v. Connecticut, 310 U.S. 296 (1940)	15
Counterman v. Colorado, 600 U.S. 66 (2023)	18, 19
Cox v. State of Louisiana, 379 U.S. 536 (1965)	4, 10, 15, 16, 17, 26
Fogarty v. Gallegos, 523 F.3d 1147 (10th Cir. 2008)	22
Frisby v. Schultz, 487 U.S. 474 (1988)	14
Hague v. Committee for Industrial Organization, 307 U.S. 496 (1939)	14
Healy v. James, 408 U.S. 169 (1972)	18

Henderson v. State , No. 07-22-00303-CR, No. 07-22-00304-CR, No. 07-22-00305-CR, 2023 WL 7851698 (Tex. App.—Amarillo, Nov. 15, 2023)	10
Jones v. Parmley , 465 F.3d 46 (2d Cir. 2006)	22
Langford v. City of St. Louis , 3 F.4th 1054 (8th Cir. 2021)	22
McKesson v. Doe , 144 S. Ct. 913 (2024)	18, 25
McKesson v. Doe , 592 U.S. 1 (2020)	24
N.A.A.C.P. v. Claiborne Hardware Co. , 458 U.S. 886 (1982)	4, 10, 12, 17, 18, 21, 26
Noto v. United States , 367 U.S. 290 (1961)	18
Packingham v. North Carolina , 582 U.S. 98 (2017)	14
People v. Pearl , 321 N.Y.S.2d 986 (1st Dep’t 1971)	22
Scales v. United States , 367 U.S. 203 (1961)	18, 19
Shuttlesworth v. City of Birmingham , Alabama , 394 U.S. 147 (1969)	10, 14
United States v. Dellinger , 472 F.2d 340 (7th Cir. 1972)	19

RULES

Sup. Ct. R. 10 12

STATUTES

DEL. CODE. ANN. tit. 11, § 1323 (West 1995) 23

TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-17-307(a)(1)
(West 2020) 23

18 PA. CONS. STAT. § 5507 (West 1973)..... 23

COL. REV. STAT. ANN. § 18-9-107 (West 2022) 23

GA. CODE ANN. § 16-11-43 (West 1968) 23

LA. STAT. ANN. § 14:100.1 (2014) 24

NJ STAT. ANN. § 2C:33-7 (West 1979) 23

TEX. PENAL CODE § 12.22 5

TEX. PENAL CODE § 42.03(a)(1) 2, 3, 5, 9

TEX. PENAL CODE § 42.03(a)(2) 8, 11

TEX. PENAL CODE § 42.03(b)..... 2, 5

TEX. PENAL CODE § 42.03(c) 5

VA. CODE. ANN. § 18.2-404 (West 1975) 24

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI

Petitioners Amara Ridge, Torrey Henderson, and Justin Thompson respectfully petition for a writ of certiorari to review the Texas Seventh Court of Appeals' judgment affirming petitioners' convictions.

OPINIONS BELOW

The Texas Seventh Court of Appeals affirmed Petitioners' convictions in a single unpublished opinion: Henderson v. State, 2023 WL 7851698 (Tex. App.—Amarillo, Nov. 15, 2023) (Mem. Op., not designated for publication). It is reproduced at App.1a-29a. The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals' denial of the petition for discretionary review is reproduced at App.30a-32a.

JURISDICTION

The Texas Seventh Court of Appeals entered its judgment on November 15, 2023, and the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals refused Petitioners' petition for discretionary review on March 27, 2024. The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U.S.C. § 1257.

CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS INVOLVED

The First Amendment to the United States Constitution provides, in pertinent part, that "Congress shall make no law * * * abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances."

The Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution provides that "No state shall make or enforce any law that abridges the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of the law.”

Texas Penal Code § 42.03(a)(1) provides that “(a) A person commits an offense if, without legal privilege or authority, he intentionally, knowingly, or recklessly: (1) obstructs a highway, street, sidewalk, railway, waterway, elevator, aisle, hallway, entrance, or exit to which the public or a substantial group of the public has access, or any other place used for the passage of persons, vehicles, or conveyances, regardless of the means of creating the obstruction and whether the obstruction arises from his acts alone or from his acts and the acts of others.”

Texas Penal Code § 42.03(b) reads “For the purposes of this section, ‘obstruct’ means to render impassable or to render passage unreasonably inconvenient or hazardous.”

INTRODUCTION

Petitioners Amara Ridge, Torrey Henderson, and Justin Thompson face imminent incarceration for peacefully exercising their First Amendment rights to assemble with others in a brief, nonviolent protest march. On a quiet Sunday afternoon, on a path along California Street, a historical downtown street in Gainesville, Texas, Petitioners organized and participated in a protest march calling for the removal of a confederate monument from the nearby courthouse lawn. Petitioners walked primarily on the sidewalk without pause until the march ended “after ten or eleven minutes,” App.3a, starting and ending at the courthouse. At most, Petitioners entered the street three times: crossing the street once to change directions, once in response to a water hazard along the curb, and once at the very end of the march to cross the street and return to the courthouse lawn. But the record contains no evidence that any of the three Petitioners themselves obstructed any vehicles or rendered any street impassable or unreasonably inconvenient or hazardous, let alone that they knowingly or intentionally did so. Nor is there any evidence that they directed, authorized, ratified, or intended that anyone else do so. Indeed, the only evidence of any Petitioner's instructions for the march involved Petitioner Thompson, who "made a speech to the protesters in which he reviewed 'a few rules, including staying hydrated and staying on the sidewalks.'" App.11a. The march was peaceful and no one was arrested on the day of the march.

Nonetheless, Petitioners were arrested three days later and ultimately convicted for "obstructing" a passageway, for allegedly walking in California Street. Texas Penal Code § 42.03(a)(1); App.2a. In affirming the convictions, the principal blockage of traffic that the court of appeals pointed to involved a bicyclist who stood in an intersection and delayed a motorist for 20 to 90 seconds. App.8a. The bicyclist was not even identified as part of the march. Id. The court sustained Petitioners' convictions on the basis of this momentary delay caused by someone else, and—relying on the passive voice—affirmed Petitioners' convictions because "traffic on California Street was stopped" by "the crowd" as some people entered the street at the end of the march. Id. at 9a. The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals, Texas' highest criminal court, denied Petitioners' petition for discretionary review. App.30a-32a.

This Court should grant certiorari because punishing Petitioners for the actions of unnamed others in the context of a peaceful march on public sidewalks and streets—quintessential traditional public forums—without any evidence that Petitioners themselves intentionally obstructed any passageway or directed, authorized, ratified, or intended that anyone else do so, violates the First and Fourteenth Amendments. The First Amendment protects protesters’ right to walk along public fora absent intentional and actual obstruction. See e.g., Cox v. State of Louisiana, 379 U.S. 536, 541-553 (1965) (reversing a conviction under an obstruction statute that lacked specific intent to obstruct because such a conviction would give law enforcement unfettered discretion to punish individuals for engaging in protected activity).

Equally, this Court has made clear that protest organizers cannot be held liable for the illegal actions of others without proof that they directed, authorized, ratified, or intended those actions. N.A.A.C.P. v. Claiborne Hardware Co., 458 U.S. 886, 929-30 (1982) (invalidating civil tort liability imposed on protest leader for actions of others absent proof that the leader directed, authorized, or ratified the tortious activity). The decision below, which punished marchers for the unintended acts of third parties, squarely contravenes the right recognized in Claiborne.

The conflicts with Cox and Claiborne are so stark that this case is appropriate for summary disposition. If left standing, however, the decision below will empower states to hold protesters criminally liable for simply stepping foot into passageways and for the independent actions of others that they did not intend.

The Court should grant certiorari and reverse in order to preserve the essential breathing room necessary for the fundamental right to protest in traditional public forums.

STATEMENT

A. Factual background

Texas's Obstruction Statute

The State convicted Petitioners under Texas's Obstruction of Passageway statute, Section 42.03(a)(1), which provides in pertinent part:

A person commits an offense if, without legal privilege or authority, he intentionally, [or] knowingly: (1) obstructs a highway, street, sidewalk, railway, waterway, elevator, aisle, hallway, entrance, or exit to which the public or a substantial group of the public has access...regardless of the means of creating the obstruction...and whether the obstruction arises from his acts alone or from his acts and the acts of others.¹

“Obstruct” is defined as “to render impassable or to render passage unreasonably inconvenient or hazardous.” Tex. Penal Code § 42.03(b). Violation of the statute is a Class B misdemeanor with a sentence of up to 180 days in jail, a maximum fine of $2,000, or both. Tex. Penal Code §§ 42.03(c), 12.22.

¹ Although § 42.03(a)(1) also includes “recklessly,” Appellants were not charged with reckless conduct. They were charged only with intentionally and knowingly obstructing a passageway. CR.7.

Petitioners' Convictions Under the Obstruction of Passageway Statute

On August 30, 2020, Petitioners Torrey Henderson, Amara Ridge, and Justin Thompson participated in a brief, peaceful march from the courthouse and back in their rural community of Gainesville, Texas along with thirty or forty others. App.3a. The march “ended after ten or eleven minutes.” Id.

Petitioners organized the march as leaders of a community organization called PRO Gainesville to call for the removal of a confederate monument at the Cooke County Courthouse. RR7.17:24-25. Petitioners’ hometown is infamous for its dark history of racism and violence, stemming from the “Great Hanging” of suspected Unionists during the Civil War.

Law enforcement officials in Gainesville had advance notice of the protest. Three days before the march, PRO Gainesville issued a press statement announcing their intention to hold a protest peacefully calling for the removal of the monument. RR9.DefendantsExhibit5.² It stated, in part, “We look forward to continue working together [with the Cooke County Sheriff’s Office and Gainesville Police Department] to create a safe environment in our community.” Id. The Gainesville Police Department’s Patrol Captain testified that the Department was “ready for them to march” that day. RR6.163:16. In preparation for the day’s activities, the Gainesville Police Department set up a barricade blocking traffic in front of the courthouse lawn. RR6.131:17-20. Law enforcement officers were on duty to “keep the peace and provide safety for all parties involved.” App.3a. Just before the march, Petitioner Thompson gave a speech in which he reviewed “a few rules, including staying hydrated and staying on sidewalks.” Id. at 11a.

² RR refers to the trial court Reporter’s Record. A single Reporter’s Record was kept for all Petitioners. It contains nine volumes.

The marchers began at the Cooke County courthouse, proceeded down California Street on the sidewalk, crossed the street to loop back, and finally crossed the street again to return to the courthouse. PetitionForDiscretionaryReview.3. During the march, Petitioners walked in a “very orderly” fashion without stopping. RR7.144:7-10; RR7.120:20-23; RR6.184.1-3. A police officer testified at trial that he allowed the marchers to walk on the roadway for a portion of the march to avoid water along the curb of the sidewalk on their way back to the courthouse. RR6.165:14-19 (“[T]here was water there so we allowed them to stay [on the street]”). During that time, “some marchers stayed on the sidewalk, some on the shoulder, and some in the roadway.” App.6a. The march “ended after ten or eleven minutes.” Id. at 3a.

The police captain who accompanied the protesters confirmed that Petitioners never stopped in the middle of the road. RR6.184:1-3. The police captain testified that there was no emergency traffic blocked by the march. RR6.184:4-9.

The record contains no evidence that any of the three Petitioners obstructed any traffic during their continuous march or did anything more than walk across and along the street briefly near the end of the short march. Instead, the Gainesville Police Department’s theory, based on a Sergeant’s testimony, was that “[e]verytime one of [the marchers] walked out in the roadway it was an obstruction violation” that “theoretically could have been separate counts.” RR6.138:17-25.

The only evidence in the record of anyone actually blocking traffic concerned an unidentified individual who was not a party here and was not charged with any offense. An unnamed person on a bicycle “put their bike sideways in the middle of the roadway.” RR7.12:21-13:2. No evidence connected Petitioners to that individual. In response to the cyclist and an unidentified individual who walked beside him, a driver slowed down and stopped her car for “twenty seconds to a minute and a half,” RR7.56:25-57:1—no longer than a typical red light. The cyclist was not arrested or prosecuted.

Though the court of appeals noted that police officers ordered some marchers out of the street, App.7a, Petitioners were not charged with “disobey[ing] a reasonable request or order to move,” Tex. Penal Code § 42.03(a)(2), and no evidence indicates that a passageway was actually obstructed at the time of such instructions, or that Petitioners caused any obstruction knowingly or intentionally. When the Gainesville Police Captain was asked “[w]ho stopped the traffic,” the testimony went as followed:

Q: Did Amara Ridge?

A: No, she did not.

Q: Did Torrey Henderson?

A: No, she did not.

Q: Did Justin Thompson?

A: No, he did not.

...

Q: Did you see them tell the people who did stop traffic to stop traffic?

A: I did not see that.

RR6.188:3-19.

No arrests were made at the march, which was brief and entirely peaceful. Three days later, however, warrants were issued for the arrest of the three Petitioners for obstructing a passageway. CR.8.³ They were charged with violating § 42.03(a)(1) of Texas's obstruction statute by "intentionally and knowingly...obstruct[ing]...California Street." CR.7. No others were arrested or charged.

B. Procedural History and Preservation

On August 25, 2022, in a consolidated trial before the County Court at Law of Cooke County, Texas, a jury found Petitioners guilty of the sole charge brought against them: intentionally and knowingly obstructing a passageway under § 42.03(a)(1), a Class B misdemeanor. The consolidated trial resulted in identical convictions and sentences for all three Petitioners. They were sentenced to seven days in jail and a $2,000 fine. CR.118. During trial, their defense attorney asserted "there is a defense that involves First Amendment protest activity." RR7.93:13-14.

Petitioners appealed their convictions, and the Texas Seventh Court of Appeals consolidated Petitioners' cases for briefing and oral argument.

³ CR refers to the Clerk's Record. There are three separate Clerk's Records: one for each Petitioner. However, these Clerk's Records are largely identical and the page numbers correspond to the same type of document in each set of records.

Petitioners argued that the evidence was insufficient to uphold Petitioners' convictions because their actions were protected by the First Amendment, citing Cox v. State of Louisiana, 379 U.S. 536 (1965) and Shuttlesworth v. City of Birmingham, Alabama, 394 U.S. 147 (1969). CourtofAppeals-MeritsBrief.13-37. Petitioners also argued that they "cannot be held criminally liable for the acts of unidentified others simply because they were among leaders of PRO Gainesville," citing N.A.A.C.P. v. Claiborne Hardware Co., 458 U.S. 886 (1982). CourtofAppeals-ReplyBrief.3-6.

On November 15, 2023, the court affirmed Petitioners' convictions in a single opinion. Henderson v. State, No. 07-22-00303-CR, No. 07-22-00304-CR, No. 07-22-00305-CR, 2023 WL 7851698 (Tex. App.—Amarillo, Nov. 15, 2023) (Mem. Op., not designated for publication). The court of appeals reasoned that "traffic on California Street was stopped," and that it made no difference that it was stopped at most only momentarily, and the court also based its holding on the actions of people other than Petitioners. App.9a. Despite the expressed concern that upholding Petitioners' convictions would violate the First Amendment, the court upheld the convictions for a peaceful, routine march, without any individualized evidence that Petitioners themselves either obstructed traffic or encouraged others to do so. Id. at 9a, 15a.

The principal "obstruction" cited by the court in upholding Petitioners' convictions involved an instance where "a young man on a bicycle" caused a car to stop in the road for 20 to 90 seconds while accompanied by a "young lady," during which time some marchers passed by. App.8a. But there is no evidence that those unnamed individuals are related to Petitioners or PRO Gainesville or were part of the march. The court also cited an incident when marchers encountered “a large puddle of water.” Id. at 6a. A police officer testified that he expressly “allowed them to stay” on the street during this time. RR6.165:14-19. Subsequently, “[s]ome marchers stayed on the sidewalk, some on the shoulder, and some in the roadway.” App.6a. The record contains no evidence that any of the Petitioners caused a car to stop or otherwise obstructed a passageway during this portion of their continuous march. Using the passive voice and attribution only to a “crowd,” the court stated that “traffic on California Street was stopped due to the presence of the crowd in the roadway.” Id. at 9a. But the court failed to connect Petitioners to any stoppage of traffic—and the record reveals no such connection. The court emphasized that police issued orders to the marchers to get off the street, but acknowledged that Petitioners were not charged with “disobey[ing] a reasonable request or order to move issued by a person the actor knows to be or is informed is a peace officer, a fireman, or a person with authority to control the use of the premises” to “prevent obstruction of a highway” or “maintain public safety.” Tex. Penal Code § 42.03(a)(2); App.16a.

The court of appeals also determined that some protesters may have had the intent to cause an actual obstruction simply because they participated in a common protest chant, “Whose streets? Our streets,” App.7a, but the record does not show that any Petitioner engaged in this chant, nor that this common chant evinces the intent or knowledge to obstruct a passageway. RR6.123:14-21.

In their petition for discretionary review to the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals, Petitioners argued that “[t]he court of appeals’ broad interpretation of obstruction fails to give breathing room to the First Amendment.” PetitionForDiscretionaryReview.6. Petitioners also argued that “[t]he court of appeals relied on the acts of unnamed others to conclude that Petitioners created an obstruction,” citing Claiborne, 458 U.S. at 920. Petition for Discretionary Review.17-21. On March 27, 2024, the Court of Criminal Appeals denied Petitioners’ consolidated petition for discretionary review without an accompanying opinion. App.30a-32a.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE PETITION

This case presents this Court with the opportunity to answer a question of national importance: do the First and Fourteenth Amendments prohibit holding protesters criminally liable for walking peacefully along public sidewalks when the record does not show that they themselves either obstructed any passageway or intended or directed anyone else to do so? Granting certiorari is necessary to protect the freedom of speech and assembly vital to our democracy, to resolve a split of authority that the decision below creates federal courts of appeals regarding important questions of federal law, and to decide the question presented in a way that does not conflict with relevant decisions of this Court. Sup. Ct. R. 10.

I. The Decision Below Conflicts with this Court’s Precedents Protecting the Right to Protest in Traditional Public Forums

The court of appeals’ decision upholds Petitioners’ criminal convictions for walking in a street during a protest without ever showing that Petitioners themselves obstructed any traffic or intended to do so. Everything that the record shows Petitioners did or said at the march was protected by the First Amendment. By participating in this march, Petitioners exercised their right to engage in peaceful protest on a public passageway, a traditional public forum. Walking on a sidewalk necessarily involves some walking into the street, for example to cross the street or in response to water in the area, as here. But such mere incidental walking in the street, without any actual and intentional obstruction of traffic, cannot be made a crime without contravening the fundamental First Amendment right to march in public fora.

A. The Court of Appeals' Opinion Conflicts with this Court's Precedent Allowing Expressive Activity on Public Streets

Petitioners were convicted for violating an obstruction statute without any evidence that they obstructed any traffic or passageway. The only particularized evidence that any traffic was "obstructed" or even remotely inconvenienced involved a 20-90 second delay caused by an unidentified bicyclist who was not even tied to Petitioners' march. Although the court cited as another example of obstruction a time when marchers stepped into the street after encountering a water hazard in their path, and vaguely claimed that the "crowd" generally caused an obstruction, it cited no evidence that Petitioners' specific actions obstructed any passageway nor did it specify the duration of any obstruction, the impact on any member of the public or Petitioners' position during any obstruction. Petitioners' convictions under these facts contravene this Court's precedent and stifle an important federal right that this Court has long defended against the overbroad application of state criminal laws.

The Court should grant certiorari to reaffirm that organizers of a peaceful protest cannot be punished for incidental presence in the street or the actions of unidentified others absent proof that the organizers themselves obstructed a passageway or directed, authorized, or ratified others to do so.

This Court has long recognized that “streets, sidewalks, parks, and other similar public places are so historically associated with the exercise of First Amendment rights that access to them for the purpose of exercising such rights cannot constitutionally be denied broadly and absolutely.” Amalgamated Food Emps. Union Loc. 590 v. Logan Valley Plaza Inc., 391 U.S. 308, 315 (1968). Public sidewalks and streets are “a quintessential forum for the exercise of First Amendment rights,” Packingham v. North Carolina, 582 U.S. 98, 104 (2017), and are “the archetype of a traditional public forum.” Frisby v. Schultz, 487 U.S. 474, 480 (1988).

Use of public spaces has “from ancient times, been a part of the privileges, immunities, rights, and liberties of citizens.” Hague v. Comm. for Indus. Org., 307 U.S. 496, 515 (1939). For this reason, this Court has reversed state law convictions that impermissibly intrude upon protesters’ right to expressive activity in public spaces. See, e.g., Shuttlesworth, 394 U.S. at 158-59 (reversing a civil rights protester’s conviction for participating in a public demonstration on a public sidewalk without a permit).

While reasonable time, place, and manner restrictions are permissible, these restrictions cannot be used to deny access to public fora “broadly and absolutely.” Amalg. Food Emps. Union Loc. 590, 391 U.S. at 315. Instead, the permissible use of such authority requires two things, particularized for each Petitioner, absent here: specific intent and actual obstruction.

Bedrock precedent makes this clear. In Cantwell, this Court reversed the conviction of Jehovah’s Witnesses for “breach of the peace”—another category of similarly sometimes-permissible, but often-overbroad laws— for being on public streets and sharing their beliefs with their neighbors. Cantwell v. Connecticut, 310 U.S. 296, 311 (1940). The lower court affirmed the conviction because the Jehovah’s Witnesses “stopped two men in the street,” id. at 302-03, but this Court held that the state’s “power to regulate [the public streets] must be so exercised as not, in attaining a permissible end, unduly to infringe the protected freedom [of the First Amendment].” Id. at 304. The Court held that the defendant could not be convicted for approaching others on the street absent a showing that he actually interfered with the rights or interests of others. Id. at 308-11.

Similarly, in Cox v. State of Louisiana, this Court reversed a conviction under a Louisiana obstruction of traffic statute where the Louisiana Supreme Court had “construed the statute so as to apply to public assemblies which do not have as their specific purpose the obstruction of traffic.” 379 U.S. at 553. The march in Cox involved approximately 2,000 students who, like the Petitioners here, took a route that looped by a courthouse. Id. at 540. Even though the sidewalk near the courthouse “was obstructed, and thus, as so construed, . . . [the march] violated the statute,” id. at 553, this Court reversed the conviction because the “obstruction” statute—which did not require specific intent to obstruct—gave law enforcement officers “unfettered discretion” to punish individuals for peaceful demonstrations on public streets. Id. at 558.

So, too, here. Punishing Petitioners for a peaceful, brief march during which they neither obstructed nor specifically intended that anyone obstruct a roadway, but during which unidentified others delayed one vehicle for 20 to 90 seconds, directly infringes Petitioners’ First Amendment rights to demonstrate in public. The court below acknowledged that Petitioners’ “march ended after ten or eleven minutes,” and Petitioners were continuously marching that entire time. Pet.1. Although Petitioners primarily marched on the sidewalk, they did, at most, step into the street to cross it, to avoid a water hazard near the sidewalk, and to cross back to the courthouse at the very end of their march. No precautions by Petitioners could have saved them from arrest under the Gainesville Police Department’s avowed position that “[e]verytime one of [the marchers] walked out in the roadway it was an obstruction violation” that “theoretically could have been separate counts.” RR6.138:17-25.

The principal instance of “obstruction” identified lasted only 20 to 90 seconds—and was caused not by Petitioners, but by unidentified others who were not arrested or prosecuted. App.8a. When the Gainesville Police Captain was asked “[w]ho stopped the traffic,” he testified that Petitioners Ridge, Henderson, and Thompson did not stop traffic or instruct others to do so. RR6. 188:3-19. Even if, as in Cox, the passageway was technically blocked for a brief period of time, the record shows no “specific purpose” by Petitioners to obstruct a roadway either by intentionally or actually interfering with traffic. 379 U.S. at 553. This Court should grant certiorari to make clear that persons who engage in a peaceful march on public sidewalks cannot be prosecuted for incidentally and briefly stepping into the street.

B. The Decision Below Conflicts with this Court’s Free Speech Precedents by Holding Petitioners Liable for the Acts of Others During the Course of a Protected Protest

The decision below also violates the First and Fourteenth Amendments because it imposes criminal liability on Petitioners as protest organizers based on the actions of others without any evidence that they directed, authorized, ratified, or intended those actions.

Over four decades ago, this Court established in N.A.A.C.P. v. Claiborne Hardware Co. that, in the context of free speech activities, even civil liability cannot be imposed on the leader of a group “merely because an individual belonged to a group” that acted unlawfully. Claiborne, 458 U.S. at 920. The Court held that the leader of a protest could not be held responsible for acts of violence that occurred during the protest where he neither “authorized, ratified, or directly threatened” those acts. Id. at 929. That principle controls here. Petitioners themselves did not actually obstruct any passageway, but were held responsible for the acts of others, without any evidence that they directed, authorized, or ratified any obstruction.

The Claiborne Court stressed that in order to distinguish non-protected activity from protected First Amendment activity, “intent must be judged ‘according to the strict law’”; otherwise an individual could be punished for “his adherence to lawful and constitutionally protected purposes, because of other and unprotected purposes which he does not necessarily share.” Claiborne, 458 U.S. at 919 (citing Noto v. United States, 367 U.S. 290, 299 (1961)); see also Brandenburg v. Ohio, 395 U.S. 444, 447 (1969); Scales v. United States, 367 U.S. 203, 229 (1961); Healy v. James, 408 U.S. 169, 185-86 (1972). Yet no such intent was established here. To the contrary, the only instructions any Petitioner provided warned protesters to remain on the sidewalks.

Recently, in Counterman v. Colorado, 600 U.S. 66 (2023), this Court affirmed the importance of mens rea standards in shielding protected speech from criminal prosecution. There, the Court held that even where an individual himself makes direct threats towards another, the individual cannot be held liable absent proof that he intended to communicate a genuine threat or recklessly disregarded the threatening character of his speech. In so doing, the Court noted that “condition[ing] liability on the State’s showing of a culpable mental state” is an “important tool to prevent” chilled speech—and one that is particularly important when it comes to “political advocacy” and “strong protests against the government and prevailing social order.” Id. at 75, 81 (cleaned up); cf. McKesson v. Doe, 144 S. Ct. 913, 914 (2024) (Sotomayor, J., statement regarding denial of writ of certiorari) (noting that in Counterman “the Court made clear that the First Amendment bars the use of ‘an objective standard’ like negligence for punishing speech, and it read Claiborne and other incitement cases as ‘demand[ing] a showing of intent.’”) (citing Counterman, 600 U.S. at 78, 79 n. 5, 81).

Ensuring that individuals are not convicted based on the unlawful acts of others in their proximity is especially important in criminal proceedings because “guilt is personal” as a basic matter of due process. Scales, 367 U.S. at 224–25; see also United States v. Dellinger, 472 F.2d 340, 392 (7th Cir. 1972) (“Specially meticulous inquiry into the sufficiency of proof is justified and required because of the real possibility in considering group activity, characteristic of political or social movements, of an unfair imputation of the intent or acts of some participants to all others.”).

The decision below conflicts with these precedents by affirming Petitioners’ convictions for leading a march in the absence of any evidence that they themselves either intentionally obstructed a roadway or directed, authorized, or ratified others to do so.

As noted above, the principal obstruction the court cited was caused by “a young man on a bicycle” who caused a single car to pause for between 20 to 90 seconds while an unidentified “young lady” walked next to him. App.8a. Neither of these individuals was arrested. And neither was identified as being related to Petitioners or PRO Gainesville or even a participant in the march. Id. In fact, the police chief testified that “nobody was ever specifically identified as being PRO Gainesville or not, except obviously we knew who the leadership was.” RR7.78:13-17; CR.109.

The court below also stated that “traffic on California Street was stopped due to the presence of the crowd on the roadway,” but failed to connect any of the Petitioners’ actions to any obstruction.⁴ App.9a. Throughout its opinion, the court repeatedly cited generically to actions of the “group” and “marchers,” including references to “some marchers” and “most marchers,” without specifying whether Petitioners themselves engaged in any specific activity that purportedly obstructed traffic. App.3a-29a. If the First Amendment right to protest means anything, individuals cannot be prosecuted for the acts of unidentified others or an amorphous “crowd,” absent evidence establishing individual responsibility and mens rea.

The court also failed to heed the “strictest law” standard for determining that Petitioner had criminal intent. No evidence demonstrated that the Petitioners intentionally stopped any vehicle or member of the public from moving. Instead, the court below relied on the incidental consequences of a peaceful march, and the actions of unspecified marchers and the “crowd.” The court also impermissibly relied on protected speech, noting that some marchers briefly chanted, “Whose streets? Our streets,” App.11a, without any evidence that Petitioners themselves engaged in this chant.⁵

⁴ See also App.6a (“[S]ome marchers stayed on the sidewalk” where the Gainesville Police Department Chief had previously given the group express permission to march); id. (“The video reflected that group members began walking on the sidewalk and on the shoulder of the highway.”).

The evidence cited by the court specific to Petitioners concerns their First Amendment protected activity. The court relied on evidence that Petitioners were leaders of a group that organized the march and were identified as “active participants” in the march. App.9a. The court also found salient the fact that Petitioners carried megaphones during their protest. App.11a. But just as in Claiborne where this Court rejected holding the plaintiff liable on the basis of his protected First-Amendment activity of giving speeches, so too Petitioners’ criminal liability cannot turn on their merely organizing and participating in the march.

Imposing criminal liability on protest “organizers” or “leaders” based on the acts of a “crowd” or of unidentified marchers without evidence that the defendants directed, authorized, or ratified any of the illegal conduct squarely violates the fundamental right to protest. If that holds for the sort of violence at issue in Claiborne, it surely holds with respect to the incidental and passing presence in the street identified in this case during a peaceful and brief march.

II. The Decision Below Conflicts with Federal Courts of Appeals

The decision below also creates a split with federal courts that require breathing room when enforcing state criminal laws against demonstrators who peacefully march and assemble on public streets and sidewalks.

⁵ The court states that “Henderson and other group members” engaged in this chant, but the evidence shows only that marchers in proximity to Henderson did so. App.7a; RR6.123:14-21.

The Second Circuit, for example, has held that the First Amendment protects demonstrators who march on public streets or sidewalks and “merely inconvenience pedestrian or vehicular traffic.” Jones v. Parmley, 465 F.3d 46, 59 (2d Cir. 2006) (Sotomayor, J.). In Jones, the Second Circuit explained that “New York courts have interpreted [the state’s obstruction] statute to permit punishment only where the conduct at issue does more than merely inconvenience pedestrian or vehicular traffic.” Id. (citing People v. Pearl, 321 N.Y.S.2d 986, 987 (1st Dep’t 1971)).

Similarly, the Eighth Circuit in Langford recognized that a protester charged with an ordinance involving the obstruction of traffic and failure to obey dispersal orders may not have been arrested lawfully if “no traffic was present” at the time that she stepped off a sidewalk. Langford v. City of St. Louis, 3 F.4th 1054 (8th Cir. 2021).

In addition, federal circuit courts have applied Claiborne to require evidence of individual protesters’ own actions rather than holding individuals liable for actions of others in a protest. Fogarty v. Gallegos, 523 F.3d 1147, 1158 (10th Cir. 2008) (“The defendants’ arguments that the police had probable cause to arrest Fogarty rest only on characterizations of the protest in general, and not on evidence of Fogarty’s individual actions. The Fourth Amendment plainly requires probable cause to arrest Fogarty as an individual, not as a member of a large basket containing a few bad eggs. In other words, that Fogarty was a participant in an antiwar protest where some individuals may have broken the law is not enough to justify his arrest.”); Barham v. Ramsey, 434 F.3d 565, 574 (D.C. Cir. 2006) (holding that “[v]ague allegations that ‘demonstrators’ committed offenses will not compensate” for a failure to show “any objective basis” for arresting individual demonstrators in a park).

III. The Question Presented is of Fundamental Importance

This case involves a fundamental element of the First Amendment: the right to engage in peaceful protest on public streets and sidewalks. If the mere fact that members of a “crowd” briefly walk in the street is sufficient to hold protest organizers and participants criminally liable, the right to protest peacefully in public fora will be a nullity. The question of whether state officials can, as here, throw individuals in jail for engaging in a short, peaceful march without any evidence that they themselves actually obstructed any roadway is of fundamental importance because the rights affected are central to our democracy. Every march will involve some incidental walking in the street, so if that is sufficient to permit conviction of a march’s leaders, every marcher will be at risk.

Moreover, the law invoked here is common to many states. Texas’s obstruction statute is identical to the obstruction statute in Tennessee (TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-17-307(a)(1)) (West 2020), nearly identical to a statute in Colorado (COL. REV. STAT. ANN. § 18-9-107) (West 2022), very similar to statutes in New Jersey (NJ STAT. ANN. § 2C:33-7) (West 1979), Delaware (DEL. CODE. Ann. tit. 11, § 1323) (West 1995), and Pennsylvania (18 PA. CONS. STAT. § 5507) (West 1973), and similar to statutes in Georgia (GA. CODE ANN. § 16-11-43) (West 1968), Louisiana (LA.

STAT. ANN. § 14:100.1) (2014), and Virginia (VA. CODE. ANN. § 18.2-404) (West 1975).

Under the decision below, state officials can arrest and convict protesters for stepping into a street so long as anyone in the crowd causes even a momentary delay in traffic. Such a brief delay is no more significant than daily incursions that occur on all public streets due to stop signs, red lights, delivery drivers, construction work, or rush hour traffic.

Failure to protect the First Amendment in the application of obstruction statutes will chill protest rights. Public sidewalks and streets are used by the public for a variety of purposes, expressive and non-expressive. Any use of a public space for protest necessarily causes some degree of potential disruption for members of the public who use these spaces for different purposes. Mere incidental disruption by “the crowd” or unnamed individuals cannot be the basis for a prosecution of a protest’s leaders, absent proof that they intended the obstruction and directed, authorized or ratified it.

The question whether Petitioners can be held responsible for actions of the “crowd” is also important. Indeed, this Court recently affirmed the “undeniably important” constitutional issue of whether a person’s “role in leading a protest onto a highway, even if negligent and punishable as a misdemeanor” can “make him personally liable for the violent act of an individual whose only association with him was attendance at the protest.” McKesson v. Doe, 592 U.S. 1, 4 (2020).

This case presents a similar and equally “undeniably important” question. Indeed, this case is an even more straightforward vehicle for this Court’s review and involves a question with broader applicability than McKesson. In that case, after remand from this Court and certification to the Louisiana Supreme Court, the state court determined that a protest leader could be held civilly liable under a Louisiana-specific tort theory for the actions of others, and the Fifth Circuit affirmed. McKesson, 144 S. Ct. at 913-14 (Sotomayor, J. statement regarding denial of writ of certiorari). Although this Court denied certiorari of the Fifth Circuit opinion, the writ came on a motion to dismiss, while the case was still proceeding in the district court below. Id. at 914. By contrast, this case has not only reached its procedural end, but involves simpler facts where no violence is at issue and the court cited no specific evidence that Petitioners did anything unlawful themselves, but held them generally liable for the actions of others absent individualized mens rea.

IV. This Case Is an Appropriate Vehicle to Defend an Important Federal Right and Resolve the Question Presented

This case presents a compelling vehicle to vindicate fundamental First Amendment rights and address issues of national concern. There are no impediments, jurisdictional or otherwise, to addressing the question presented and making clear that the First Amendment protects individuals' right to march in public fora without facing criminal consequences for "obstruction" when the defendants neither obstruct roadways themselves nor directed, authorized, or ratified others to do so. The record here makes clear that the three Petitioners were held responsible not for their own actions, but the conduct of unnamed others and an amorphous "crowd," without any evidence that they intended or directed anyone to obstruct traffic.

Finally, because the decision below is so plainly contrary to N.A.A.C.P. v. Claiborne Hardware and Cox v. State of Louisiana, this case is appropriate for summary disposition. A grant, vacate, and remand order would make no new law, but reinforce the central importance of respecting the right to protest from arbitrary penalties based on overbroad statutes and guilt imposed for the actions of unnamed others.

CONCLUSION

For all the above reasons, the petition for a writ of certiorari should be granted and the Seventh Court of Appeals' decision summarily reversed, or, in the alternative, the Court should set the case for plenary review.

Respectfully submitted,

Emerson Sykes
Brian Hauss
Vera Eidelman
AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES
UNION FOUNDATION, INC.
125 Broad St., 18th Fl.
New York, NY 10004

David D. Cole
AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES
UNION FOUNDATION, INC.
915 15th St. NW
Washington, D.C. 20005

Savannah Kumar
Counsel of Record
Brian Klosterboer
Edgar Saldivar
Adriana Piñon
Thomas Buser-Clancy
ACLU FOUNDATION OF
TEXAS, INC.
1018 Preston St., 4th Fl.
Houston, TX 77002
(956) 374-4310
skumar@aclutx.org
Sorsha Huff
DEANDRA GRANT LAW
1333 W. McDermott Dr.,
Ste. 180
Allen, TX 75013

APPENDIX

APPENDIX

Appendix A, Texas Seventh Court of Appeals Opinion (November 15, 2023) 1a

Appendix B, Texas Court of Criminal Appeals Refusal of Henderson's Petition for Discretionary Review (March 27, 2024) 30a

Appendix C, Texas Court of Criminal Appeals Refusal of Ridge's Petition for Discretionary Review (March 27, 2024) 31a

Appendix D, Texas Court of Criminal Appeals Refusal of Thompson's Petition for Discretionary Review (March 27, 2024) 32a

Appendix E, Texas Seventh Court of Appeals Order Staying Issuance of Mandates (May 7, 2024) 33a

APPENDIX A

IN THE COURT OF APPEALS SEVENTH
DISTRICT OF TEXAS AT AMARILLO

No. 07-22-00303-CR
No. 07-22-00304-CR
No. 07-22-00305-CR

TORREY LYNNE HENDERSON, AMARA JANA
RIDGE, AND JUSTIN ROYCE THOMPSON,
APPELLANTS

V.

THE STATE OF TEXAS, APPELLEE

On Appeal from the County Court at Law
Cooke County, Texas¹

Trial Court Nos. CR20-65983, CR20-65984, CR20-
65985, Honorable John H. Morris, Presiding

November 15, 2023

MEMORANDUM OPINION

Before QUINN, C.J., and PARKER and
YARBROUGH, JJ.

¹ These appeals were transferred to this Court from the Second Court of Appeals by docket equalization order of the Supreme Court of Texas. See TEX. GOVT CODE ANN. § 73.001.

Torrey Lynne Henderson, Amara Jana Ridge, and Justin Royce Thompson, Appellants, appeal from their convictions for the misdemeanor offense of obstructing a highway or passageway.² We affirm.

² See TEX. PENAL CODE ANN. § 42.03(a)(1).

BACKGROUND

On August 30, 2020, Appellants participated in a protest in Gainesville calling for the removal of a Confederate monument on the lawn of the Cooke County Courthouse. A group called Progressive Rights Organizers (PRO) Gainesville, of which Appellants were leaders, organized the event. PRO Gainesville had released a press statement three days earlier regarding the protest. On the day of the event, a group of protestors gathered on the courthouse lawn. Counter-protestors gathered across the street. Several law enforcement officers were on duty at the event to, as one officer testified, “keep the peace and provide safety for all parties involved.”

After a few people gave speeches, about thirty or forty people began marching eastward along California Street, a state highway.³ Initially, the marchers were on the sidewalk. At times, individuals moved off the sidewalk into the street. A Gainesville police officer who was monitoring activities that day testified that he told marchers to get back on the sidewalk. After walking about six blocks to Denison Street, the group walked across California Street, crossing where there was no stop sign or stoplight. They then walked west, returning to the courthouse. The march ended after ten or eleven minutes. No arrests were made that day.

On September 3, 2020, Appellants were arrested and charged with the offense of obstructing a highway or passageway. All three pleaded not guilty and the case proceeded to a jury trial. The jury found each appellant guilty and assessed identical punishments: confinement in the county jail for seven days and a fine of $2,000. This appeal followed.

³ Captain Chris Garner testified that California Street is “the main avenue for our emergency vehicle traffic, EMS, fire department, [and] police.”

ANALYSIS

ISSUES 1–4: SUFFICIENCY OF THE EVIDENCE

In their first four issues, Appellants argue that the evidence is insufficient to support their conviction because (1) they were continuously marching along a passageway; (2) there is no evidence that they caused any obstruction by rendering a passageway impassable or unreasonably inconvenient or hazardous; (3) there is no evidence they had the requisite mens rea of “intentionally and knowingly” obstructing a passageway; and (4) they were given the legal privilege and authority to walk along the sidewalk and street by police.

In assessing the sufficiency of the evidence, we review all the evidence in the light most favorable to the verdict to determine whether, based on the evidence and reasonable inferences therefrom, a rational trier of fact could have found the essential elements of the offense beyond a reasonable doubt. Jackson v. Virginia, 443 U.S. 307, 319, 99 S. Ct. 2781, 61 L. Ed. 2d 560 (1979); Queeman v. State, 520 S.W.3d 616, 622 (Tex. Crim. App. 2017). “[O]nly that evidence which is sufficient in character, weight, and amount to justify a factfinder in concluding that every element of the offense has been proven beyond a reasonable doubt is adequate to support a conviction.” Brooks v. State, 323 S.W.3d 893, 917 (Tex. Crim. App. 2010) (Cochran, J., concurring). When reviewing all the evidence under the Jackson standard of review, the ultimate question is whether the jury’s finding of guilt was a rational finding. See id. at 906–07 & n.26. In our review, we defer to the jury’s credibility and weight determinations because the jury is the sole judge of the witnesses’ credibility and the weight to be given their testimony. See id. at 899. Thus, even if we would have resolved the conflicting evidence in a different way, we must defer to the jury’s findings that are supported by sufficient evidence. Id. at 901–02 (discussing Lancon v. State, 253 S.W.3d 699, 707 (Tex. Crim. App. 2008)).

The relevant portion of section 42.03 of the Texas Penal Code provides:

(a) A person commits an offense if, without legal privilege or authority, he intentionally, knowingly, or recklessly:

(1) obstructs a highway, street, sidewalk, railway, waterway, elevator, aisle, hallway, entrance, or exit to which the public or a substantial group of the public has access, or any other place used for the passage of persons, vehicles, or conveyances, regardless of the means of creating the obstruction and whether the obstruction arises from his acts alone or from his acts and the acts of others;

...

(b) For purposes of this section, “obstruct” means to render impassable or to render passage unreasonably inconvenient or hazardous

TEX. PENAL CODE ANN. § 42.03.⁴

⁴ The complaint and information for each Appellant was identical and largely tracked the statute, alleging that each “did then and there without legal privilege or authority, intentionally and knowingly obstruct, by rendering impassable or by rendering passage unreasonably inconvenient or hazardous, a street, namely California Street, to which the public or a substantial

The evidence presented at trial included the following. Gainesville Police Department Sergeant Jack Jones testified that he was the leader of the department's special response team on August 30, 2020, and observed the events outside the courthouse and on California Street. During Jones's testimony, the trial court admitted into evidence a video recording taken that day. The video reflected that group members began walking on the sidewalk and on the shoulder of the highway. When the group crossed California Street, both westbound and eastbound traffic came to a stop. As the group walked back to the courthouse, they encountered a large puddle of water next to the sidewalk. Some marchers stayed on the sidewalk, some on the shoulder, and some in the roadway. More group members entered the roadway as the march continued. By the time they reached the courthouse, most marchers were in the street. They walked roughly five abreast, stretching from the shoulder to the roadway's center yellow line.⁵

Captain Garner testified that the place where the group crossed California Street is not a controlled intersection and has no crosswalk. He observed westbound and eastbound vehicles "having to come to a stop" there as the group crossed the street.⁶

group of the public had access, by walking in the roadway with a group [Appellant] had organized, causing it to be impassable or hazardous for motorist[s] or pedestrians."

⁵ Evidence presented at trial showed that the two lanes of the roadway were divided by double yellow lines, indicating a no-passing zone.

⁶ Texas law provides that a pedestrian shall yield the right-of-way to a vehicle on the highway if crossing a roadway at a place other than in a marked crosswalk or in an unmarked crosswalk Gainesville Police Department Investigator Shane Greer, who was directed to monitor the march, testified that he observed some participants get into the street while they walked east. He told marchers to get back on the sidewalk “approximately ten times.” At the intersection of Denison Street and California Street, someone on a bicycle positioned himself in the intersection and “shut down eastbound and westbound traffic.” Greer observed “multiple vehicles stopped westbound and eastbound.” When the marchers crossed California Street and began their westbound return walk, Greer instructed marchers on the roadway to get back onto the sidewalk, and they complied. However, once the group reached the post office, “the majority of the group entered the roadway into the lane of traffic.” Greer again told them to exit the roadway, but they disregarded his commands. More people then entered the roadway. Greer testified that he told Appellants that they needed to get out of the roadway. He specifically identified Appellant Thompson, who was at the rear of the group near Greer. He further testified that he made eye contact with Appellant Henderson and told her to exit the roadway. She looked at him and shook her head. Then Henderson and other group members began chanting, “Whose streets? Our streets.” The crowd remained on the street. Greer testified that no vehicles could get around the group and that California Street was obstructed. It remained obstructed until the group returned to the courthouse.

Additionally, the State presented witness Cynthia Idom, who was driving east on California Street at the time of the march. Idom testified that she noticed the group of people on the south side of California. A young man on a bicycle suddenly cut in front of her, causing her to stop abruptly. She said she “had to stop pretty quick or [she] would have hit him.” Idom testified that the man “put his hand out for me to stop. And then a young lady walked beside him with her long rifle I sat there and waited and they kind of just watched me and I watched them.” While Idom was stopped, the marchers crossed California Street. She testified that she waited for all of them to get across the roadway before she could continue driving. She was unsure of how long she was stopped but stated that “it felt longer than I’m sure it was.” She agreed it was “between maybe twenty seconds to a minute and a half.”

at an intersection. See TEX. TRANSP. CODE ANN. § 552.005(a).

Finally, Gainesville Chief of Police Michael Phillips testified that his agency brought in staffing and made accommodations for the August 30 protest at the courthouse. An area outside the courthouse was established for protestors and another area was set up across the street for the “counter-protest presence.” He testified that the marchers did not have a permit to march on California Street that day and that nobody had applied for permission to use California Street for a march that day. Phillips had previously explained to PRO Gainesville leaders that using the sidewalks for marching was allowed, but marching in the streets was not. Phillips testified that no vehicular patrol was assigned for a march and that no officers were assigned to conduct traffic control or escort a march. He said the police department “had not prepared for that type of mobile event.”

In their first argument, Appellants assert that section 42.03 is not violated by people engaged in continuous moving or marching. We find no merit in Appellants' argument. The statute contains no requirement that an obstruction must be stationary, and we will not read such a requirement into the statute. The evidence was sufficient for a rational trier of fact to have found beyond a reasonable doubt that Appellants, even if they were continuously marching, obstructed the highway. We overrule Appellants' first issue.

Appellants next argue that there is no evidence that they rendered any passageway unreasonably inconvenient or hazardous. "Obstruct" means to render impassable or to render passage unreasonably inconvenient or hazardous. TEX. PENAL CODE ANN. § 42.03(b). As set forth above, Greer testified that traffic on California Street was stopped due to the presence of the crowd in the roadway. Officer Greer not only testified that Appellants were leaders of PRO Gainesville, which organized the event, but he also positively identified all three as active participants in the march that obstructed the roadway. Idom testified that she had to stop her vehicle on the roadway because the crowd walked across the street in front of her.

We conclude that this evidence is sufficient to support the jury's finding that the highway was rendered impassable or that passage was unreasonably inconvenient or hazardous. See, e.g., Hays v. State, 634 S.W.2d 313, 315 (Tex. Crim. App. 1982) (holding that individual standing in middle of sidewalk, forcing pedestrian to walk around in mud, sufficient to support finding that obstruction of sidewalk rendered passage unreasonably inconvenient); Robles v. State, 803 S.W.2d 473, 476–77 (Tex. App.—El Paso 1991, no pet.) (evidence was sufficient to support finding that passage to medical facility was impassable and defendant caused inconvenience even though witness could have stepped over or around protestor to enter building); Lauderback v. State, 789 S.W.2d 343, 346–47 (Tex. App.—Fort Worth 1990, writ ref'd) (where appellant blocked one lane of traffic, passage rendered unreasonably inconvenient or hazardous). We overrule Appellants' second issue.

In their third issue, Appellants urge that the evidence does not support a finding that they knowingly and intentionally obstructed the street. “A person acts intentionally, or with intent, with respect to the nature of his conduct or to a result of his conduct when it is his conscious objective or desire to engage in the conduct or cause the result.” TEX. PENAL CODE ANN. § 6.03(a). “A person acts knowingly, or with knowledge, with respect to a result of his conduct when he is aware that his conduct is reasonably certain to cause the result.” Id. § 6.03(b). The language of the jury charge tracked these definitions.

Proof of intent generally relies on circumstantial evidence. Haye, 634 S.W.2d at 315. A jury may infer intent from a defendant's acts, words, and conduct. Guevara v. State, 152 S.W.3d 45, 50 (Tex. Crim. App. 2004). We must scrutinize circumstantial evidence of intent as we do other elements of an offense. Laster v. State, 275 S.W.3d 512, 519–20 (Tex. Crim. App. 2009). If the record supports conflicting inferences, we “must presume—even if it does not affirmatively appear in the record—that the trier of fact resolved any such conflict in favor of the prosecution, and [we] must defer to that resolution.” Matson v. State, 819 S.W.2d

839, 846 (Tex. Crim. App. 1991) (quoting Farris v. State, 819 S.W.2d 490, 495 (Tex. Crim. App. 1990)).⁷

There was testimony that Appellants were instructed, both prior to the march and during the march, to stay on the sidewalks. Appellant Thompson testified that, before the march, he made a speech to the protesters in which he reviewed “a few rules, including staying hydrated and staying on sidewalks . . .” Officer Greer testified that he told the marchers to get out of the street and back on the sidewalk “approximately ten times.” The evidence also showed that, despite being informed of the need to stay on the sidewalk, Appellants entered the roadway and maintained their presence in the roadway. Witnesses identified Appellants Henderson and Ridge walking next to each other at the front of the group of protesters in California Street. Appellant Henderson was specifically instructed to get off the roadway by Officer Greer. She shook her head and the protesters then began chanting, “Whose streets? Our streets.”⁸ Garner testified that when he told Appellant

⁷ In support of their argument that they lacked the requisite mens rea, Appellants rely, in part, on their own testimony from the punishment phase of the trial. In a bifurcated trial before a jury on a plea of not guilty, “our consideration of the evidence is necessarily limited to that evidence before the jury at the time it rendered its verdict of guilt.” Barfield v. State, 63 S.W.3d 446, 450 (Tex. Crim. App. 2001) (en banc) (quoting Munoz v. State, 853 S.W.2d 558, 560 (Tex. Crim. App. 1993) (en banc)). Therefore, we do not consider evidence from the punishment phase of the trial when determining the sufficiency of the evidence to support Appellants’ convictions.

⁸ The evidence showed that Appellants Henderson and Ridge carried a megaphone at the front of the group and that Appellant Thompson, who was near the rear of the group, also had a megaphone.

Thompson the marchers were not getting out of the roadway, Thompson said he had “no clue” and “just shrugged [him] off.” Thompson admitted that he walked for “at least two blocks in the street.” Finally, a video of the entire march was played for the jury. It was the jury’s task to review the video and other evidence and draw its own conclusions about Appellants’ knowledge and intent. Considering all the evidence in the light most favorable to the jury’s verdict and deferring to the jury’s implicit inference about the weight of the evidence, a reasonable juror could find that Appellants knowingly and intentionally obstructed the street. We conclude that the evidence sufficiently establishes that Appellants possessed the requisite intent to commit the offense in question. Appellants’ third issue is overruled.

Appellants next argue that “[e]ven if simply stepping onto California Street were considered an obstruction, the evidence is insufficient to prove [they] lacked the legal privilege or authority to walk on California Street.” Appellants did not offer evidence that any authorized official gave them permission to walk in the street, but argued that officers “tacitly permitted” the march by “accompanying” them. Police officers testified that they did not grant Appellants permission to walk in the street. When the group began marching away from the courthouse, some officers were sent with the group to keep people safe, but not to assist the protestors or to direct or stop traffic. Again, Officer Greer testified to telling marchers to stay on the sidewalk multiple times. We conclude the evidence was sufficient to prove that Appellants lacked legal privilege or authority to walk on California Street. We overrule Appellants’ fourth issue.

ISSUE 5: FIRST AMENDMENT PRIVILEGE

The fifth issue raised by Appellants alleges that they had the legal privilege and authority to walk along the sidewalk and street under the First Amendment. They claim that their peaceful march in a street, “a quintessential public forum,” was consistent with the exercise of First Amendment freedoms.

Free speech guarantees are not absolute. The State may reasonably regulate the time, place, and manner of the exercise of First Amendment rights as necessary to the protection of other compelling state interests. Grayned v. City of Rockford, 408 U.S. 104, 115–16, 92 S. Ct. 2294, 33 L. Ed. 2d 222 (1972); Lauderback, 789 S.W.2d at 347 (citing Palmer v. Unauthorized Practice Comm. of the State Bar of Texas, 438 S.W.2d 374, 377 (Tex. Civ. App.—Houston [14th Dist.] 1969, no writ) for the proposition that free speech guarantees in both the United States Constitution and the Texas Constitution must yield to the extent necessary to protect public interest). The First Amendment does not guarantee the right to communicate one’s views at all times and places or in any manner that one desires. Heffron v. Int’l Soc’y for Krishna Consciousness, 452 U.S. 640, 647, 101 S. Ct. 2559, 69 L. Ed. 2d 298 (1981). For example, “[t]he First Amendment does not entitle a citizen to obstruct traffic or create hazards for others.” Singleton v. Darby, 609 F. App’x 190, 193 (5th Cir. 2015) (per curiam). “A State may therefore enforce its traffic obstruction laws without violating the First Amendment, even when the suspect is blocking traffic as an act of political protest.” Id.; see, e.g., Shuttlesworth v. Birmingham, 382 U.S. 87, 100, 86 S.

Ct. 211, 15 L. Ed. 2d 176 (1965) (Fortas, J., concurring) (observing that “[c]ivil rights leaders, like all other persons, are subject to the law and must comply with it. Their calling carries no immunity. Their cause confers no privilege to break or disregard the law.”). The State clearly has the power under the First Amendment to regulate use of streets and roadways for the access and safety of the public. See Haye, 634 S.W.2d at 315 (holding that section 42.03 protects public’s right to reasonably convenient use of passageways without encroachment upon First Amendment rights).

Moreover, the record establishes that the City of Gainesville had adopted procedures by which people could obtain a permit to have a march, demonstration, or parade on its streets, including the state highway also known as California Street. It is uncontested that Appellants neither sought nor obtained a permit from the city for their march on August 30, 2020. Appellants argue that, if their convictions were predicated on their lack of an official permit, their convictions should be overturned due to Gainesville officials’ unconstitutional application of the permit policy. An “as-applied” challenge to a statute asserts that a statute, although generally constitutional, operates unconstitutionally as to the claimants because of their circumstances. Gillenwaters v. State, 205 S.W.3d 534, 536 n.3 (Tex. Crim. App. 2006). To complain about the constitutionality of an ordinance as applied, defendants must raise the issue at trial. Curry v. State, 910 S.W.2d 490, 496 (Tex. Crim. App. 1995) (en banc); see TEX. R. APP. P. 33.1(a). Appellants do not direct us to any point in the record reflecting that they raised this issue, nor has our review revealed such an objection. Therefore, this issue was not properly preserved for this Court's appellate review.

Because Appellants have not established that the First Amendment secured an absolute privilege allowing them to march in California Street, we overrule their fifth issue.

ISSUES 6–9: JURY CHARGE ERRORS

Appellants' sixth through ninth issues claim various errors in the jury charge. An analysis of a claim of error in the jury charge involves two steps: we first determine whether the charge is erroneous and, if so, we then decide whether an appellant was harmed by the erroneous charge. Wooten v. State, 400 S.W.3d 601, 606 (Tex. Crim. App. 2013). If error occurred in a jury charge, whether it was preserved determines the degree of harm required for reversal. Kirsch v. State, 357 S.W.3d 645, 649 (Tex. Crim. App. 2012). Unpreserved charge error warrants reversal only when the error resulted in egregious harm. Nava v. State, 415 S.W.3d 289, 298 (Tex. Crim. App. 2013); Almanza v. State, 686 S.W.2d 157, 171 (Tex. Crim. App. 1985) (en banc) (op. on reh'g).

In issue six, Appellants assert the trial court erred by including the following instruction in the abstract portion of the charge:

A person commits an offense if . . . the defendant intentionally, knowingly, obstructs a highway, street or sidewalk . . . [or] disobeys a reasonable request or order to move issued by a person the actor knows or is informed is a peace officer, a fireman, or a person with authority . . . to prevent obstruction of a highway or any of the other areas set out above.

The instruction tracks the language of sections 42.03(a)(1) and 42.03(a)(2)(A) of the Penal Code. Appellants contend that the inclusion of this language authorized the jury to convict them for an unindicted offense, i.e., section 42.03(a)(2)(A)'s prohibition on "disobeying a reasonable request or order to move."

Since Appellants did not object to the complained-of portion of the charge, we review the record for egregious harm. Assuming, without deciding, that the trial court erred by including language from section 42.03(a)(2)(A) in the abstract portion of the jury charge, we analyze whether the error caused egregious harm justifying reversal.

In determining egregious harm, we must consider "the actual degree of harm . . . in light of the entire jury charge, the state of the evidence, including the contested issues and weight of probative evidence, the argument of counsel[,] and any other relevant information revealed by the record of the trial as a whole." Almanza, 686 S.W.2d at 171. "Egregious harm is a high and difficult standard to meet, and such a determination must be borne out by the trial record." Villarreal v. State, 453 S.W.3d 429, 433 (Tex. Crim. App. 2015) (internal quotations omitted).

Considering the entirety of the charge, this first factor weighs against a finding of egregious harm. The error appears only in the abstract portion of the charge, not in the application portion. The application paragraph of the charge instructed the jury:

Now, if you find from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that on or about the August 30, 2020, in Cooke County, Texas, [Appellant], did then and there intentionally and knowingly obstruct, by rendering impassable or by rendering passage unreasonably inconvenient or hazardous, a street, namely California Street, to which the public or a substantial group of the public had access, by walking in the roadway with a group the defendant had organized, causing it to be impassable or hazardous for motorists or pedestrians, then you will find the defendant guilty of the offense of obstructing a highway or passageway as charged in the information.

“It is the application paragraph of the charge, not the abstract portion, that authorizes a conviction.” Crenshaw v. State, 378 S.W.3d 460, 466 (Tex. Crim. App. 2012). Here, the application paragraph of the charge correctly instructed the jury that it could not convict Appellants unless they found beyond a reasonable doubt that they had obstructed California Street. “Texas courts have repeatedly held that where the application paragraph of the charge correctly instructs the jury on the law applicable to the case, this mitigates against a finding that any error in the abstract portion of the charge was egregious.” Roberts v. State, No. 02-17-00108-CR, 2018 Tex. App. LEXIS 2609, at *8 (Tex. App.—Fort Worth Apr. 12, 2018, no pet.) (per curiam) (mem. op., not designated for publication) (quoting Kuhn v. State, 393 S.W.3d 519, 529 (Tex. App.—Austin 2013, pet. ref’d). The application paragraph did not authorize the jury to convict based on Appellants’ disobeying a reasonable request or order to move, but adhered to the offense alleged in the complaint.

With respect to the state of the evidence, we recognize that the jury saw and heard evidence showing that marchers were told to leave the street and stay on the sidewalk, and that such orders were not obeyed. However, as set forth above, Appellants’ mental state was contested, and the State's evidence that they received and refused orders to exit the street had a bearing on that issue. Additionally, Appellants argued that the presence of the police officers indicated that the marchers were in the roadway with permission; again, evidence the police officers were verbally instructing marchers to get out of the roadway had a bearing on that issue. We conclude that this factor does not weigh in favor of finding that Appellants suffered egregious harm.

When weighing the third factor, argument of counsel, we must determine whether any statements made by the State, Appellants' trial counsel, or the trial court exacerbated or ameliorated the complained-of charge error. Arrington v. State, 451 S.W.3d 834, 844 (Tex. Crim. App. 2015). Appellants direct us to two places in the record at which the State referred to Appellants' failure to obey a request or order to move. In one instance, the questioning addressed Appellants' mental state, and in the other, it addressed their claim that the officers implicitly permitted them to march in the street. Because these references were not connected to the failure to obey an order to move as a separate offense, we conclude the third factor does not weigh in favor of finding that Appellants suffered egregious harm.

Finally, we consider the record as a whole. Appellants argue that nothing informs the jury to disregard the extraneous definition related to section 42.03(a)(2) and that the jury was allowed to convict them for unindicted offenses. However, as discussed above, the application paragraph of the charge did not authorize the jury to convict Appellants for an unindicted offense. Considering all four Almanza factors, we conclude that Appellants did not suffer egregious harm from the complained-of instruction. We overrule issue six.

In issue seven, Appellants contend that the charge was erroneous because it included a conduct-oriented culpable mental state, while obstruction of a passageway is a result-of-conduct offense.⁹ Appellants claim that the nature-of-conduct language included in the definition allowed the jury to convict them based solely on their intentional conduct of “being in the street” rather than the result of that conduct: “obstruction.” Although the abstract portion of the charge defined the culpable mental states in both conduct-oriented and result-oriented language, the application paragraph instructed the jury that, in order to find Appellants guilty, they were required to find that Appellants did “intentionally and knowingly obstruct, by rendering impassable or by rendering passage unreasonably inconvenient or hazardous, a street”

The language of the charge is consistent with the definitions and offense as set forth in the Penal Code. See TEX. PENAL CODE ANN. §§ 6.03, 42.03. Further, where the Court of Criminal Appeals has not categorized an offense, a trial court does not err by including the statutory definitions of both “intentionally” and “knowingly.” See Murray v. State, 804 S.W.2d 279, 281 (Tex. App.—Fort Worth 1991, pet. ref’d) (“[W]hen an offense is not clearly categorized as either a ‘result’ or a ‘nature of the conduct’ type offense, with respect to the intent and knowledge required, . . . the trial court may submit statutory definitions of ‘intentional’ and ‘knowingly’ because both definitions allow the jury to consider the nature of the offender’s conduct or the results of his conduct.”). Because a binding court has not definitively determined whether the offense is conduct-based or results-based, we conclude that the trial court did not err by including the definitions of “intentionally” and “knowingly” at issue. We overrule Appellants’ seventh issue.

⁹ Appellants do not direct us to any court decision establishing that obstructing a highway is a result-of-conduct offense. The Fourth Court of Appeals has concluded that obstructing a highway is a conduct-

In their eighth issue, Appellants argue that the jury charge is erroneous because it failed to require that the jury’s verdict be unanimous with regards to a specific criminal act. Because Appellants did not raise this objection during the charge conference, we review for egregious harm. Nava, 415 S.W.3d at 298.

Under the Texas Constitution and Code of Criminal Procedure, a Texas jury must reach a unanimous verdict about the specific crime that the defendant committed. O’Brien v. State, 544 S.W.3d 376, 382 (Tex. Crim. App. 2018). The jury must agree that the defendant committed one specific crime, but this does not mean that the jury must unanimously find that the defendant committed that crime in one specific way or even with one specific act. Id. The requirement of jury unanimity is not violated by a jury charge that presents the jury with the option of choosing among various alternative manner and means of committing the same statutorily defined offense. Jourdan v. State, 428 S.W.3d 86, 94 (Tex. Crim. App. 2014); see also Francis v. State, 36 S.W.3d 121, 125 (Tex. Crim. App. 2000) (“The unanimity requirement is undercut when a jury risks convicting the defendant on different acts, instead of agreeing on the same act for a conviction.”).

In this case, the evidence at trial indicated that California Street was obstructed at more than one point during the short march. In its closing argument, the State asserted, “California Street became impassable or blocked on three different occasions.” Appellants contend that non-unanimity may have resulted in this case because the State charged one offense while it presented evidence that Appellants committed the charged offense on multiple but separate occasions. See Ngo v. State, 175 S.W.3d 738, 748 (Tex. Crim. App. 2005) (requiring jury unanimity on the specific crime for which defendant is convicted).

We are not convinced the charge was erroneous. But even if we assume that the trial court erred by not instructing the jury that it was required to unanimously agree on which specific portion of the march satisfied the charge, we nonetheless overrule Appellants’ eighth issue because we cannot conclude that any such error caused Appellants egregious harm. See Wooten, 400 S.W.3d at 607 (error analysis not required when harm analysis is dispositive). The egregious harm standard is difficult to meet and requires a showing that Appellants were deprived of a fair and impartial trial. Taylor v. State, 332 S.W.3d 483, 489 (Tex. Crim. App. 2011). As set forth above, we consider the entire jury charge, the state of the evidence, including the contested issues and weight of probative evidence, arguments of counsel, and any other relevant information revealed by the record of the trial as a whole. Almanza, 686 S.W.2d at 171.

When considering the entire jury charge, we observe that it contained instructions that jurors were to “unanimously agree[] upon a verdict” and “reach[] a unanimous verdict.” The jury charge did not inform jurors that they must reach unanimity as to which portion of California Street was obstructed. However, we note that the charges against Appellants arose from a single transaction, the August 30 march. The application paragraph of the charge tracked the complaint and information, to which Appellants did not object. To convict Appellants, the jury was required to find that they obstructed California Street “by walking in the roadway with a group” Appellants had organized, causing it to be impassable or hazardous. The jury was required to agree on the same act, which caused the same injury, i.e., “walking in the roadway . . . causing it to be impassable or hazardous,” for a conviction.¹⁰ The first factor weighs against a finding of egregious harm.

Under the second factor, “we look to the state of the evidence to determine whether the evidence made it more or less likely that the jury charge caused appellant actual harm.” Arrington, 451 S.W.3d at 841. As summarized above, the jury heard testimony about and viewed photographs and a video recording of the August 30 protest. Appellants’ defensive theory of the case was not that Appellants did not march in the roadway as alleged, but that their conduct was authorized or privileged or that any obstruction was not unreasonable. Given the state of the evidence, it is highly unlikely that any juror believed that some of the alleged incidents took place but that others did not. On these facts, the likelihood of non-unanimity is “exceedingly remote.” See Jourdan, 428 S.W.3d at 98.

¹⁰ This is unlike Ngo, on which Appellants rely, in which the State sought one conviction with evidence that the defendant committed three different acts that the applicable statute defined as separate criminal offenses. See Ngo, 175 S.W.3d at 742.

This factor weighs against a finding of egregious harm.¹¹

Under the third factor, we consider whether any arguments of counsel may have exacerbated or ameliorated the error in the charge. Arrington, 451 S.W.3d at 844. In voir dire, the State informed jurors that “the verdict has to be unanimous.” In closing, the State focused the jurors’ attention on the three specific instances of obstruction but did not indicate whether the jury had to be unanimous about which specific incident Appellants committed when reaching their verdict. Unlike Ngo, upon which Appellants rely, the prosecution did not affirmatively represent to the jury that it need not be unanimous. See Ngo, 175 S.W.3d at 750–51 (in case in which there were three different ways charged offense could have been committed, State improperly argued it could prove one to the satisfaction of part of the jury, another one to the satisfaction of others, and the third one to the satisfaction of another part of the jury). Because the arguments of counsel neither exacerbated nor ameliorated the error, this factor weighs neither for nor against a finding of egregious harm.

We find no additional circumstances that require consideration under the fourth factor. We conclude that, on the particular facts of this case, the failure of the trial court to expressly require juror unanimity, if it was error, neither affected the very basis of the case nor actually operated to deprive Appellants of their valuable right to a unanimous jury. Appellants did not suffer egregious harm. Accordingly, we overrule issue eight.

¹¹ In response to Appellants’ assertion that the evidence was “generalized for an entire group of people and not tethered to Appellants’ specific conduct,” we note that the jury charge explicitly provided for a conviction only upon a finding of specific conduct by each individual Appellant, namely that said Appellant obstructed California Street “by walking in the roadway,” rendering the street impassable.

In issue nine, Appellants assert that the jury charge contained a misstatement of law on their First Amendment defense, specifically the instruction reading, “It is not a defense to the charge of obstructing a highway or passageway that the defendant is involved in a demonstration or protest.” Appellants objected to the sentence and asked for it to be struck from the charge. The trial court denied their request. On appeal, Appellants urge that the instruction likely confused the jury and caused Appellants harm because “all three Appellants were deprived of a statutory defense and of their constitutional right to expressive activity as a result of this legally erroneous instruction.”

Article 36.14 of the Texas Code of Criminal Procedure requires that a trial court provide a jury charge “distinctly setting forth the law applicable to the case” TEX. CRIM. PROC. CODE ANN. art. 36.14. A jury charge must include instructions informing jurors “under what circumstances they should convict, or under what circumstances they should acquit.” Ex parte Chandler, 719 S.W.2d 602, 606 (Tex. Crim. App. 1986) (Clinton, J., dissenting) (per curiam) (en banc). “Reversible error in the giving of an abstract instruction generally occurs only when the instruction is an incorrect or misleading statement of law that the jury must understand in order to implement the commands of the application paragraph” Alcoser v. State, 663 S.W.3d 160, 165 (Tex. Crim. App. 2022) (internal quotations omitted).

Here, the instruction was most likely superfluous. However, even assuming the trial court erred in including the complained-of instruction, we must determine whether the error was harmful. When a defendant timely objects, reversal is required if the error caused “some harm” to the defendant. Marshall v. State, 479 S.W.3d 840, 843 (Tex. Crim. App. 2016). “Some harm” requires a finding of “actual harm, as opposed to theoretical harm, as a result of the error.” Id. After reviewing the entire record, we cannot conclude that Appellants suffered harm from its inclusion.

First, the trial court’s instruction that being involved in a demonstration or protest is not a defense to the charged offense is not an incorrect statement of the law. As the Second Court of Appeals held in Lauderback, section 42.03 is “limited to the obstruction of highways and there [are] no facial restrictions on free speech.” Lauderback, 789 S.W.2d at 348 (noting that appellant could have picketed elsewhere, but chose to do it in an area that caused obstruction in highway, so State had interest in removing her); see also NAACP v. Claiborne Hardware Co., 458 U.S. 886, 918, 926, 102 S. Ct. 3409, 73 L. Ed. 2d 1215 (1982) (it is well-established that expressive activity is not a defense to an individual’s own unlawful conduct). Additionally, Appellants were not deprived of their First Amendment defense. The instruction immediately following the one challenged by Appellants sets forth the defense provided under section 42.04 of the Penal Code, which provides, as a defense to prosecution, that a defendant be given a warning or order to move, disperse, or otherwise remedy the violation prior to a speech-based arrest. See TEX. PENAL CODE ANN. § 42.04. Finally, including a merely superfluous abstract instruction never produces reversible error, as it has no effect on the jury's ability to fairly and accurately implement the commands of the application paragraph. See Plata v. State, 926 S.W.2d 300, 302–03 (Tex. Crim. App. 1996), overruled on other grounds by Malik v. State, 953 S.W.2d 234, 235 (Tex. Crim. App. 1997); Manrique v. State, No. 02-19-00458-CR, 2021 Tex. App. LEXIS 7682, at *28 (Tex. App.—Fort Worth Sept. 16, 2021, no pet.) (mem. op., not designated for publication) (“When the application portion of the jury charge correctly tracks the indictment, the error of giving surplus law in the abstract portion of the charge is not reversible.”).

We conclude that inclusion of the challenged instruction, even if erroneous, did not cause harm to Appellants. Thus, there is no reversible error. We overrule Appellants' ninth issue.

ISSUE 10: FAILURE TO EXCUSE JURORS FOR CAUSE

In issue ten, Appellants contend that four prospective jurors should have been excused for cause because they expressed bias against Appellants. To preserve error regarding a trial court's denial of a challenge for cause, the record must show that an appellant made a clear and specific challenge for cause, that he used a peremptory challenge on that juror, that all his peremptory challenges were exhausted, that his request for additional strikes was denied, and that an objectionable juror sat on the jury. Buntion v. State, 482 S.W.3d 58, 83 (Tex. Crim. App. 2016). Here, Appellants' challenges for cause to venire members 9, 10, 15, and 23 were denied by the trial court. Appellants' trial counsel used two of her three peremptory challenges on number 10 and number 23; venire members 9 and 15 sat on the jury. However, Appellants' trial counsel did not use her remaining peremptory challenge on number 9 or number 15, nor did she request additional strikes. Therefore, Appellants have waived any error with respect to this complaint. See Riddle v. State, No. 02-02-00157-CR, 2003 Tex. App. LEXIS 2933, at *3-4 (Tex. App.—Fort Worth Apr. 3, 2003, pet. dismiss'd) (mem. op.) (per curiam). We overrule issue ten.

ISSUE 11: INEFFECTIVE ASSISTANCE OF COUNSEL

In their related final issue, Appellants argue that they received ineffective assistance of counsel because their trial counsel failed to seek additional peremptory strikes to ensure that venire members 9 and 15 were not empaneled.¹²

To prevail on an ineffective assistance of counsel claim, a defendant must show that (1) counsel's performance was deficient and (2) that the deficient

¹² Venire member number 9 was asked by the State if she could listen to the court's instructions and follow them in considering the evidence in the case to determine a verdict. She answered, "No. If they were protesting peaceably then we wouldn't be here. I would follow the letter of the law and what the law asked me to do." The trial court then asked, "Once you hear all the evidence and hear the real facts from the witnesses who were there or have knowledge of the situation, could you then make a fair decision as to whether the Defendants are guilty or not guilty?" She answered, "No."

Number 15 stated that she was raised to "believe officers" and agreed that she "would give an officer more credibility just by virtue of [his] being an officer." However, she also revealed that her father, brother, and sister had a negative experience with law enforcement.

performance prejudiced the defense. Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 687, 691–92, 104 S. Ct. 2052, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674 (1984). Failure to make the required showing of either deficient performance or sufficient prejudice defeats the claim of ineffectiveness. Id. at 697. For an appellate court to find that counsel was ineffective, “counsel’s deficiency must be affirmatively demonstrated in the trial record; the court must not engage in retrospective speculation.” Lopez v. State, 343 S.W.3d 137, 142 (Tex. Crim. App. 2002). “It is not sufficient that appellant show, with the benefit of hindsight, that his counsel’s actions or omissions during trial were merely of questionable competence.” Id. at 142–43 (quoting Mata v. State, 226 S.W.3d 425, 430 (Tex. Crim. App. 2007)). Direct appeal is usually an inadequate vehicle to raise this claim because the record is generally undeveloped. Goodspeed v. State, 187 S.W.3d 390, 392 (Tex. Crim. App. 2005). Trial counsel should ordinarily have an opportunity to explain her actions before an appellate court denounces her actions as ineffective. Id.

The record does not reflect why counsel chose not to request additional peremptory strikes. Appellants did not file a motion for new trial, and trial counsel thus has not had an opportunity to explain or defend her trial strategy. Moreover, trial counsel has not had an opportunity to explain the effect, if any, of her alleged deficient conduct with regards to the exercise of peremptory strikes. Conducting voir dire and exercising peremptory strikes are inherently matters of trial strategy. See State v. Morales, 253 S.W.3d 686, 697–98 (Tex. Crim. App. 2008) (en banc). As the Court of Criminal Appeals noted in Morales, trial counsel could have a tactical reason for keeping a juror who appears to be unfavorable. Id. at 698. Trial counsel may, for example, have chosen to use her peremptory strikes on venire members she found were less favorable to her client. Here, nothing in the record indicates trial counsel’s reasons for how she exercised her peremptory strikes. In the absence of such information, we cannot say that trial counsel’s conduct was so outrageous that no competent attorney would have engaged in it. See, e.g., Delrio v. State, 840 S.W.2d 443, 446 (Tex. Crim. App. 1992) (per curiam) (en banc) (“Although we would certainly expect the occasion to be rare, we cannot say . . . that under no circumstances could defense counsel justifiably fail to exercise a challenge for cause or peremptory strike against a venireman who deemed himself incapable of serving on the jury in a fair and impartial manner.”).

Appellants have not established that trial counsel’s performance fell below an objective standard of reasonableness under prevailing professional norms. Strickland, 466 U.S. at 687–88. Having determined that Appellants failed to establish the first prong of the Strickland test, we need not consider whether they were prejudiced by the allegedly deficient performance. We overrule Appellants’ eleventh issue.

CONCLUSION

Having overruled each of Appellants’ issues on appeal, we affirm the judgments of the trial court.

Judy C. Parker
Justice

Do not publish.

APPENDIX B

OFFICIAL NOTICE FROM THE COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEALS OF TEXAS

3/27/2024

COA Case No. 07-22-00303-CR

HENDERSON, TORREY LYNNE

Tr. Ct. No. CR20-65983
PD-0844-23

On this day, the Appellant's petition for discretionary review has been refused.

Deana Williamson, Clerk

APPENDIX C

OFFICIAL NOTICE FROM THE COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEALS OF TEXAS

3/27/2024

COA Case No. 07-22-00304-CR

RIDGE, AMARA JANA

Tr. Ct. No. CR20-65984
PD-0845-23

On this day, the Appellant's petition for discretionary review has been refused.

Deana Williamson, Clerk

APPENDIX D

OFFICIAL NOTICE FROM THE COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEALS OF TEXAS

3/27/2024

COA Case No. 07-22-00305-CR

THOMPSON, JUSTIN ROYCE

Tr. Ct. No. CR20-65985
PD-0846-23

On this day, the Appellant's petition for discretionary review has been refused.

Deana Williamson, Clerk

APPENDIX E

IN THE COURT OF APPEALS SEVENTH
DISTRICT OF TEXAS AT AMARILLO

No. 07-22-00303-CR
No. 07-22-00304-CR
No. 07-22-00305-CR

TORREY LYNNE HENDERSON, AMARA JANA
RIDGE, AND JUSTIN ROYCE THOMPSON,
APPELLANTS

V.

THE STATE OF TEXAS, APPELLEE

On Appeal from the County Court at Law
Cooke County, Texas

Trial Court Nos. CR20-65983, CR20-65984, CR20-
65985, Honorable John H. Morris, Presiding

May 7, 2024

ORDER STAYING ISSUANCE OF MANDATES

Before QUINN, C.J., and PARKER and
YARBROUGH, JJ.

Appellants, Torrey Lynne Henderson, Amara
Jana Ridge, and Justin Royce Thompson, appealed from their convictions for the misdemeanor offense of obstructing a highway or passageway. We affirmed the district court’s judgments in November of 2023. See Henderson v. State, Nos. 07-22-00303-CR, 07-22-00304-CR, 07-22-00305-CR, 2023 Tex. App. LEXIS 8617, at *33 (Tex. App.—Amarillo Nov. 15, 2023, pet. ref’d) (mem. op., not designated for publication). Thereafter, Appellants filed petitions for discretionary review with the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals, which were refused on March 27, 2024.

Each Appellant has now filed with this Court a motion requesting that we stay issuance of our mandate pursuant to Texas Rule of Appellate Procedure 18.2, which authorizes an appellate court to grant a stay of its mandate if a party “move[s] to stay issuance of the mandate pending the United States Supreme Court’s disposition of a petition for writ of certiorari.” TEX. R. APP. P. 18.2. In their motions, Appellants assert that they would incur serious hardship from the mandate’s issuance if the United States Supreme Court should later reverse the judgments. The State has not filed a response to Appellants’ motions, but the motions indicate that Appellants’ request for a stay is opposed by the State.

We grant Appellants’ motions and will stay issuance of our mandates for 90 days in order to allow Appellants to seek relief from the United States Supreme Court. See id. After 90 days have passed, this Court’s mandates will issue without further notice. See id.

It is so ordered.

Judy C. Parker
Justice

Do not publish.